One-quarter (27%) of maintainers are responsible for defining OSS security policy.

69% of OSS contributors want defined best practices for secure software development.

56% of projects support reproducible builds.

Project documentation is widespread but not ubiquitous: 87% of projects responded that they provide basic documentation.

Reducing developer fatigue through automation is the #2 approach to improve security across the OSS supply chain.

69% of OSS contributors want defined best practices for secure software development.

By the end of 2023, 72% of maintainers and core contributors feel that OSS will be secure.

30% of maintainers are responsible for implementing OSS security policy.

39% of maintainers and core contributors manually review source code.

Making security tools more intelligent is the #1 approach to improve security across the OSS supply chain.

The #1 reason for maintaining OSS projects is the enjoyment of learning.

The #1 approach to evaluating the security of OSS packages in use are SCA and SAST security tools.

49% of OSS contributors want employer incentives for OSS contributions.

One-quarter (27%) of maintainers are responsible for defining OSS security policy.

30% of maintainers are responsible for implementing OSS security policy.

Reducing developer fatigue through automation is the #2 approach to improve security across the OSS supply chain.

Project documentation is widespread but not ubiquitous: 87% of projects responded that they provide basic documentation.

69% of OSS contributors want defined best practices for secure software development.

56% of projects support reproducible builds.

By the end of 2023, 72% of maintainers and core contributors feel that OSS will be secure.

30% of maintainers are responsible for implementing OSS security policy.

39% of maintainers and core contributors manually review source code.

Making security tools more intelligent is the #1 approach to improve security across the OSS supply chain.

The #1 reason for maintaining OSS projects is the enjoyment of learning.

The #1 approach to evaluating the security of OSS packages in use are SCA and SAST security tools.

49% of OSS contributors want employer incentives for OSS contributions.

One-quarter (27%) of maintainers are responsible for defining OSS security policy.

30% of maintainers are responsible for implementing OSS security policy.